Through these agreements the Military bound itself to expand and reconstruct several roads, free of charge, by using its own manpower and machinery, as well as clear shrubs on the local roads. The Capital committed to providing the fuel needed for the operation of the machinery.

It is curious that the agreements state that the objective of the military engagement is hands-on training of its members for the future tasks in war and peacetime, and support to the civilian population. On the other hand, it is stated that the Capital's objective is to improve the existing local transport infrastructure.
